Since towns and cities first came into existence, they have been market centers. In some towns there were open-air markets where farmers could come and exchange their crops for cloth, pottery, and other articles that they needed. The temporary stalls that merchants set up soon became permanent stores where the merchants could display their merchandise throughout the year. Most stores specialized in one kind of product, such as clothing or jewelry. In many places, the stores that sold the same products were close together on the same street or in the same corner of the market.

41. How long have towns and cities been market centers?
(A) Since they came into existence. (B) About 800 hundred years ago.
(C) No one knew the answer. (D) Since people invented pottery.
42. What could farmers do in open-air market?
(A) They play, dance and sing. (B) They make a lot of friends.
(C) They get their need for their daily life. (D) They could watch a live show.
43. According to the passage, what did most stores sell?
(A) Many kinds of articles.
(B) A particular kind of product.
(C) Anything people get in a convenience store.
(D) Nothing at all.
